GPI
GLOBAL PROCUREMENT INITIATIVE
UNDERSTANDING BEST VALUE

Promoting Value-Based Procurement as a Tool for Economic Growth

The establishment of sound procurement policies and practices is fundamental to ensuring a fair, level playing field in international tenders. Transparent procedures for awarding contracts for goods and services establish accountability and encourage the cost-effective use of public funds, which creates stable, efficient markets. Nevertheless, many emerging economies use low-cost procurement policies that impede fair competition and sustainable economic growth. By relying on low-cost as the determining factor for award, governments often fail to consider the benefits that can be gained from high-quality products and services.

In an effort to improve the overall outcome of public procurements in emerging economies, USTDA launched the Global Procurement Initiative: Understanding Best Value (GPI) in 2013. The GPI helps public officials learn how to integrate tools like life-cycle cost analysis and best value determinations into their procurement processes in a fair, transparent manner. This helps them acquire high-quality, long-lasting technologies, while building smart, sustainable infrastructure with overall savings to their government. These procurement methods also open up markets to greater international competition.

Partner Organizations

USTDA develops its customized GPI activities with its partners from the Government Procurement Law Program at George Washington University Law School. The Agency also works with technical specialists in the energy, transportation and IT sectors who provide in-depth training on conducting life-cycle cost analyses. USTDA also partners with the World Bank – and collaborates with the major multilateral development banks – in the planning and execution of the GPI.
